A boy named Evan Taylor (Freddie Highmore) grows up an outcast in a home for boys, believing that his parents are alive. He can hear music in everything: the light, the wind, the air. He believes that he can hear the music from his parents. He thinks that they always wanted him and would come and get him someday.

Through a series of flashbacks, his parents are revealed to be named Lyla Novacek, (Keri Russell), a famous concert cellist, and Louis Connelly (Jonathan Rhys Meyers), an Irish guitarist and lead singer of a rock band.

Evan has a very strong faith that if he could learn to play the music, he will have a chance to be found by his parents and believes that they will hear him.
